Let's travel back in time to more than 65 million years ago—back when dinosaurs roamed the earth!

Allosaurus

The Allosaurus is a member of the theropod family, which run on two three-toed feet.

An Allosaurus zips by, roaring as it looks for something to eat. This dino is known for being both fierce and fast, chasing prey at about 21 miles an hour.

The Allosaurus is a carnivore, which means it eats meat from other animals. Using its strong arms and 8-inch claws, it grabs its prey and holds on tight. Then it and takes a nice big bite.

Oviraptor

Oviraptors are considered small dinosaurs, but they are still as big as humans!

Stay back! An Oviraptor is guarding its nest, just like a modern bird would. This ferocious mother has a beak that comes in handy when it needs to crush hard objects, like shellfish. If a predator gets too close, it may trap at them, too!

Like all dinosaurs, Oviraptors hatch from eggs. They are protective of their nests, staying close even when danger is near. When their eggs hatch, the Oviraptors become the devoted parents of baby raptors.
